The correct answer is Option 3 i.e. Neither I nor II follows

Statements: In a recent address to the public, the government accepts that there have been gaps in preventing soil degradation and is committed to improving soil health. The lack of funds in the public organisation for conducting further research on agricultural and land management techniques and systems that improve soil health has been pointed out as a major point of concern by a committee set up to recommend climate action faults.

Course of Actions:

I. The government should set up another committee to double-check and possibly nullify the claims made by the recommending committee.: False (The government have accepted that there have gaps in preventing soil degradation and is committed to improving soil health. Setting up another committee to double-check and possibly nullify the claims is a wrong course of action.)

II. The government should take action against those who are presenting counter-arguments against these recommendations.: False (The arguments that are made against and in support are a vital part of actions taken by the organisation. Actions taken for presenting counter-arguments are the wrong course of action.)

Hence, the correct answer is Neither I nor II follows.
